Thanks Ed !

I doubled my money on that one and got out -
I have learned a lot from your trades -
My hope is you keep trading forever ! :)

hello Ed.

I have been trying to get my kids into investing. they are in college now.

they have had a TDA account for a while and have done well with SPY and MCD since 2008

I would like them to be more active in their accounts and your system will be perfect for this.

They are already interested and have opened their sim accounts and are ready to start learning option spreads

They will be signing up for your emails.

The perfect way to get the younger folks involved.

Thanks again for all that you do :)

Hi Ed,
You seem to get better grip of situation when you thrown out crazy stocks from the mix

Lynn C.

Hi Ed, I very much prefer your rules. Let your winners ride and close the losers.

I'm new at this so my opinion doesn't count for much, but I think you are as close as you can get to being right on. The nut to crack of course, is judging which ponies to ride for the week which carries the risk of the market moving against you, but then, that is the name of the game. I have followed you for some time and I think, in spite of some really big losing weeks, for the most part I think you do as well as others (paid guru's included) that I track. I also think this current choppy period we are in as the market reaches for the 'top' and rolls over, is probably as difficult a market environment as you will experience.

So ... keep it up and thanks for sharing.

Hi Ed

nice advice and appreciated your efforts.

Thanks so much for the professional advice AND YOUR EXCELLENT TECHNICAL ANALYSIS.

...there is nothing wrong with your trade entrance criteria...given all of the information available, they are high probability trades. But you cannot predict the future. The smartest thing to do is keep your risk proportionate to the amount of money you are willing to lose...because we all know you're going to lose.
